Deesha Dyer-- a philanthropist, award-winning strategist, on-the-ground community organizer, and executive operations expert. At age thirty-one, Deesha was a community college student who applied for a White House internship and worked her way up to become social secretary for President Barack Obama and First Lady Michelle Obama. Deesha was included in Marie Claire's new guard of women changing the world, the Root's most influential African Americans, and Essence's "Women Who Run the White House." In April 2024, Deesha released her highly anticipated debut memoir, Undiplomatic, about her non-traditional journey in politics and advocacy, and how she confronted "impostor syndrome." Undiplomatic is for those who think they don't belong, don't deserve, and don't qualify and gives them insight, motivation, laughter, and guts to succeed.

Praise for Undiplomatic:

"…It is valuable reading, especially for the many who have doubted their self-worth. Undiplomatic provides powerful, authentic antidotes to "impostor syndrome" and demonstrates…that it is necessary to believe in oneself."   ---Ambassador Susan Rice.

"Deesha's memoir, Undiplomatic, is emotional, enthralling, and inspiring. This book is for anyone starting on their journey or still on their journey, which is all of us."   ---Alyssa Mastromonaco, White House deputy chief of staff for President Barack Obama
